

The Six Commandments of Donald J. Trump

In recognition of his support for their campaign to require schools to post The Ten Commandments in classrooms, Congressional Republicans have presented President Donald J. Trump with an edited version of the sacred tablet to be posted in the Oval Office.

A note signed by House Speaker Mike Johnson praised Trump for being “the most biblically correct President in the history of the United States.” Johnson called Trump “a role model every parent should hold out for their children to emulate,” adding that “no previous President has so devotedly honored our God and modeled the teachings of our Savior Jesus Christ.”

Asked about the four commandments the Republican version redacted, Speaker Johnson replied that as President of the United States, Trump should be held to a different standard than mere commoners. He also announced that “master negotiator” Donald Trump was in the process of negotiating a deal with God to exempt all of the newly installed golden images in the Oval Office from the Second Commandment, and to exempt the slaughter of alleged Venezuelan drug runners from the Fifth Commandment.

What has become known as The Trump Commandments is currently in the shop to be gold-plated so as to better fit the Golden Calf motif of Trump’s White House
